QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether honest services fraud may serve as a money laundering predicate offense where the statute listing money laundering predicate offenses does not include the honest services statute?

2. Whether a sentence within a range established by the United States Sentencing Guidelines is entitled to a rebuttable presumption of reasonableness?

3. Whether a federal court has authority to order restitution under the Mandatory Victims Restitution Act to an entity that did not have any legal entitlement to funds for which restitution was ordered?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

1. A superseding indictment named the petitioner, Ralph Aulenta ("Aulenta") and Irving Mangurten ("Mangurten") as defendants. Aulenta pled guilty, agreed to cooperate and testified against the petitioner. The district court severed Mangurten, an accountant who prepared the petitioner's personal and corporate tax returns and performed bookkeeping work for the petitioner's companies. Trial Transcript ("Tr.") 1299. Mangurten testified as a defense witness at the petitioner's trial, and later entered a guilty plea to a perjury charge.

Trial commenced on January 30, 2004 and ended on February 17, 2004. The jury returned guilty verdicts on counts charging money laundering conspiracy, 18 U.S.C. § 1956(h), substantive money laundering, 18 U.S.C.

§ 1957(a), tax conspiracy, 18 U.S.C. § 371, and filing false tax returns, 26 U.S.C. § 7206(1) and (2). District Court Document ("R.") 142, 229.

Count One charged that the petitioner and Aulenta, the president of a local office of an insurance brokerage known as ABI/Acordia, Inc. ("ABI/Acordia"), schemed to defraud ABI/Acordia of money and Aulenta's honest services in relation to insurance provided to the municipality of Rosemont, Illinois, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1343 and 1346. R. 23. Count One did not name Rosemont as a victim. Although the government moved to dismiss Count One prior to trial, honest services fraud remained in the case as the predicate offense for a series of substantive money laundering charges under 18 U.S.C. § 1957. See R. 136 (jury instructions).

2. Petitioner was a successful businessman in non-insurance fields. Tr. 451, 683, 1377. Petitioner was friendly with Rosemont officials. He owned a restaurant in the Rosemont Village Hall, operated a business that rented equipment to an exposition center in Rosemont and operated an office building cleaning service with the son of Rosemont's long-time mayor. Tr. 69-70, 457, 480-81, 675, 679, 682-83, 910-13, 1298-99, 1379-82. ABI/Acordia sometimes served as an insurance broker for the petitioner's companies. Tr. 451, 683, 1377.

Petitioner and Aulenta were friendly. In the summer of 1990, the petitioner asked Aulenta if he would be interested in bidding on Rosemont's insurance. Tr. 67, 71-72, 255. In late fall 1990, the petitioner arranged a meeting between Aulenta and Rosemont officials. Tr. 73. ABI/Acordia won Rosemont's insurance business, and brokered insurance coverage for Rosemont between 1991 and 1996.

ABI/Acordia occasionally paid referral fees to non-employees, and Aulenta viewed referral fees as "perfectly legal." Tr. 67, 391, 393. Aulenta agreed to give the petitioner a referral fee. Tr. 76.

In 1991 and 1992, ABI/Acordia prepared $33,670 and $45,000 checks, respectively, payable to one of the petitioner's companies. Tr. 121-22, 403-09, 745. Petitioner endorsed the checks and returned them to Aulenta. Tr. 123-24, 316. Aulenta testified that he provided the petitioner with ½ of the proceeds in cash payments. Tr. 130-31, 164-69.

In January 1993, Aulenta and the petitioner opened a joint trading account at Charles Schwab. Tr. 173-79, 766, 794. Petitioner's information was disclosed in the Schwab file. Tr. 287, 794. The referral fees between 1993 through 1996 were ultimately deposited into the Schwab account. Tr. 173-74, 184, 192, 543-46, 766, 769, 773, 795.

The referral fee payments were denoted in ABI/Acordia's files around the time of the withdrawals. Tr. 105-07, 140-41, 181, 188-89, 194-97, 338, 349, 355, 360-61, 368, 432, 436. Apart from the referral fees, ABI/Acordia, with knowledge of its employees who administered the account, overcharged Rosemont approximately $225,081 between 1992 and 1996. Tr. 333, 337-38, 365; Pre-Sentence Investigation Report ("PSR"), Deft's Version.

Aulenta did not inform the petitioner that he was obtaining the fee illegally or against company policy. Tr. 261, 312. Aulenta did not disclose to the petitioner that he was padding Rosemont's bill or violating the law. Tr. 294. Nor did Aulenta disclose to the petitioner ABI/Acordia's internal accounting mechanisms (ABI/Acordia sometimes treated the checks as return of premiums to the petitioner's companies). Tr. 314.

A total of $210,827 was deposited into the Schwab account. Tr. 779, 807. By December 31, 1996, the Schwab account had increased in value to $352,674. Tr. 780. In early 1997, the petitioner and Aulenta closed the account. Tr. 204-08. The withdrawals from the Schwab account and subsequent deposits were the "monetary transactions" charged in money laundering counts. Tr. 204-08; R. 23.

3. Aulenta was the one who violated a fiduciary duty to his employer, and defrauded Rosemont. In addition, Aulenta committed other frauds that had no connection to the petitioner. Tr. 241-47. Aulenta admitted to such offenses in a plea agreement, and the district court ordered him to pay a total of $2,006,316 in restitution to five victims, including ABI/Acordia. R. 114, 177. Petitioner was ordered to pay $288,670 in restitution to one entity, ABI/Acordia (on a joint and several basis with Aulenta). 5/18/05 Tr. 54; R. 229.

The district court sentenced Aulenta to 20 months imprisonment. At sentencing, the petitioner asserted that, under United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220 (2005), and 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(6), the incarceration portion of the sentence should not exceed 20 months. 5/18/05 Tr. 31-34, 36-38. Not "shocked" by the disparate treatment and unwilling to second-guess an executive decision, the district court rejected the petitioner's argument. 5/18/05 Tr. at 38-42. The court imposed a 36-month prison sentence, which was within the middle of the United States Sentencing Guidelines range found by the court.

4. Petitioner appealed his conviction. In an opinion written by Judge Easterbrook, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed. United States v. Boscarino, 437 F.3d 634 (7th Cir. 2006); App. A.

The court addressed three issues in its opinion. First, the court ruled that the honest services statute could serve as a predicate for a money laundering charge even though that statute is not included in the statutory list of money laundering predicate offenses. Second, the court held that ABI/Acordia was a proper restitution payee even though ABI/Acordia had bilked Rosemont out of the funds for which restitution was ordered. Third, the court presumed that the sentence was reasonable because it was within the guidelines range, and did not discern any unwarranted disparity between the sentences of Aulenta and the petitioner.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. HONEST SERVICES FRAUD DOES NOT QUALIFY AS A MONEY LAUNDERING PREDICATE OFFENSE

Unknown at common law, the offense of money laundering, since its inception in 1986, Pub.L. No. 99-570, has emerged as a "darling of the modern prosecutor's nursery." Harrison v. United States, 7 F.2d 259, 263 (2d Cir. 1925) (Hand, J.). Although money laundering statutes criminalize certain monetary or financial transactions which are obviously ubiquitous in our modern society,[1] their reach is

[1] As stated in an FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin:

> The International Monetary Fund estimates that the amount of money laundering occurring on a yearly basis could range between 2 and 5 percent of the world's gross not unlimited. Not every financial transaction involving proceeds of criminal activity constitutes the offense of money laundering.

At bottom, interpretation of the money laundering statutes must be grounded in statutory language. Here, however, the court of appeals affirmed the petitioner's money laundering convictions where the predicate offense is not set forth in the statutory list of predicate offenses. This is an unwarranted expansion of the money laundering statutes, and allows money laundering prosecutions beyond those intended by Congress.

To establish a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1957(a), the government must prove that the criminally derived property (valued over $10,000) involved in the monetary transaction "is derived from specified unlawful activity." The term "specified unlawful activity" is defined in 18 U.S.C. § 1956(c)(7) – a statute that does not list, or cross-reference, the honest services statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1346.

domestic product – or somewhere between $600 billion and $1.5 trillion. Estimates come from a variety of sources based upon both macroeconomic theories and on microeconomic approaches. The U.S. Department of the Treasury has suggested that $600 billion represents a conservative estimate of the amount of money laundered each year, and some U.S. law makers believe that, not only does the amount lie somewhere between $500 billion and $1 trillion, but that half is being laundered through U.S. banks. Due to the clandestine nature of laundering activity, governments and concerned organizations cannot accurately quantify the amount of money laundered each year. Some estimates suggest that the amount of money laundered each year is approximately $2.8 trillion, an amount more than four times greater than the figure generally accepted.

Money Laundering, FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin v.70, no.5, p.1-9 (May 2001).

In the district court, the petitioner asserted that honest services fraud could not produce proceeds capable of being laundered. Tr. 499-500, 1534, 1642-43. The district court initially determined that honest services instructions could constitute error because § 1346 did not refer to a scheme to defraud another of money. Tr. 1532-33. The court, however, reconsidered, and instructed the jury on honest services fraud since the dismissed wire fraud count alleged a violation of the honest services statute. Tr. 1533.

The Seventh Circuit affirmed. The court found the absence of the honest services statute in the definition of "specified unlawful activity" to be inconsequential because § 1346 constitutes a "definitional clause." Boscarino, 437 F.3d at 636; App. A-3. The court cited no authority to support this conclusion.

The legal error in the court of appeals' analysis is evident from the mail fraud statute's history. First enacted in 1872, the statute was one section in a recodification of the Postal Act. See Act of June 8, 1872, ch. 335, § 301, 17 Stat. 283. The statute has been the subject of a variety of modifications throughout the years, most notably the 1909 amendment that added the language "or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises." Act of Mar. 4, 1909, ch. 321, § 215, 35 Stat. 1130. This amendment, a central focus of McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350 (1987), confirmed the necessity for a mail fraud charge to be premised upon a deprivation of "money or property."

In response to McNally, Congress criminalized honest services fraud by passing 18 U.S.C. § 1346 as part of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. The honest services statute provides, "For the purposes of this chapter, the term 'scheme or artifice to defraud' includes a scheme or artifice to deprive another of the intangible right of honest services."

Section 1957 requires the "criminally derived property . . . [be] derived from specified unlawful activity." Section 1956(c)(7) states that "any act or activity constituting an offense listed in" 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1) may serve as a money laundering predicate. Section 1961(1) references "any act which is indictable under . . . section 1341 (relating to mail fraud) [or] section 1343 (relating to wire fraud) . . . " At no time since the enactment of the honest services statute has Congress enlarged the list of offenses in § 1956(c)(7) or § 1961(1) to include § 1346.

McNally makes clear that §§ 1341 and 1343 – statutes that are listed as appropriate money laundering predicates in § 1961(1) – do not facially proscribe a scheme to defraud another of honest services. Absent § 1346, an honest services fraud scheme simply does not amount to an "act which is indictable under" §§ 1341 or 1343. As a matter of statutory interpretation, therefore, honest services fraud may not serve as a money laundering predicate.[2] Cf. United States v. Napoli, 54 F.3d 63, 67-68 (2d Cir. 1995) (engaging in financial transactions with theft proceeds did not constitute money laundering since theft is not a predicate act listed in §§ 1956(c)(7) or1961(1)); see also United States v. Genova, 333 F.3d 750, 757 (7th Cir. 2003) (State official misconduct offense did not constitute proper RICO predicate act); Jennings v. Emery, 910 F.2d 1434, 1438 (7th Cir. 1990) (civil RICO complaint deficient because "[m]ost all of the purported racketeering acts listed are outside the scope of" § 1961); Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc. 897 F.2d 21, 25 (2d Cir. 1990) (Congress did not deploy RICO "as an instrument against all unlawful acts. It targeted only predicate acts catalogued under 1961(1)."); O'Malley v. O'Neill, 887 F.2d 1557, 1159 n.5 (11th Cir. 1989) (pre-§ 1346 decision, stating that "a plaintiff in a civil RICO action, when relying on the predicate acts of mail fraud, must show proof of loss of tangible property resulting from the defendant's conduct"); R.E. Davis Chemical Corp. v. Nalco Chemical Corp., 757 F. Supp. 1499, 1509 (N.D. Ill. 1990) (conspiracy to commit mail fraud does not qualify as RICO predicate act). The Seventh Circuit's decision in this case conflicts with this authority.[3]

In addition, examination of the money laundering statute shows that "honest services" cannot constitute "money," "property" or "proceeds" capable of being laundered in a financial transaction. Section 1957(a) specifically

[3] This is not the only case in which the Seventh Circuit has indicated that honest services fraud may serve as a RICO predicate act. In Genova, Seventh Circuit affirmed a RICO conviction, which included honest services mail fraud predicate acts. The Genova defendant, however, did not assert that his honest services mail fraud convictions should be reversed because § 1346 is not in § 1961(1)(B). In Doe v. Roe, 958 F.2d 763 (7th Cir. 1992), the court affirmed the dismissal of a civil RICO action in which some of the predicate acts sounded in honest services mail fraud. Doe determined that the plaintiff failed to allege an injury to property or business, necessary for civil mail fraud-based RICO. In dicta, the Doe court stated that § 1346 falls "within the RICO definition of a racketeering act" and possibly "could serve as predicate racketeering acts." 958 F.2d at 767 and 769 n.5.

requires that property involved in the monetary transaction be "criminally derived property," meaning "any property constituting, or derived from, proceeds obtained from a criminal offense," § 1957(f)(3).

The words "money" and "property" plainly do not encompass the intangible right to honest services. As this Court has recognized, mail/wire fraud under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343 requires the "object of the fraud . . . be '[money or] property in the victim's hands.'" Pasquantino v. United States, 544 U.S. 349, 125 S. Ct. 1766, 1771 (2005) (quoting Cleveland v. United States, 531 U.S. 12, 26 (2000)). Similarly, the word "proceeds" does not encompass the intangible right to honest services, and has been defined in economic terms. See United States v. Scialabba, 282 F.3d 475, 478 (7th Cir. 2002) ("the word 'proceeds' in § 1956(a)(1) denotes net rather than gross income of an unlawful venture"); American Heritage Dictionary, 544 (4th ed.) (defining "proceeds" as "[t]he amount of money derived from a commercial or fund-raising venture; the yield"); Black's Law Dictionary, 1242 (8th ed. 2004) (defining "proceeds" as "the value or land, goods or investments when converted into money" or "the amount of money received from a sale").

The district court's initial impression was correct – the intangible right to honest services is not a monetary interest capable of being laundered. The district court changed its position, and the Seventh Circuit affirmed, on grounds that an honest services fraud scheme can produce "proceeds." Boscarino, 437 F.3d at 636; Tr. 1532-33; App. A-4. That begs the question. The money laundering statute outlaws certain "monetary transactions" committed with "criminally derived property" – it is not enough that some monetary loss be a byproduct. Cf. United States v. Walters, 997 F.2d 1219, 1227 (7th Cir. 1993) ("A deprivation is a necessary but not a sufficient condition of mail fraud. Losses that occur as byproducts of a deceitful scheme do not satisfy the statutory requirement."); United States v. Mandel, 862 F.2d 1067, 1072 (4th Cir. 1988) ("McNally does not allow a mail fraud conviction merely on the finding that those charged received any property in connection with the scheme; McNally requires a finding that the scheme defrauded or intended to defraud someone of money or property.") (emphasis original).

Money laundering allegations have become prevalent in today's society. See, e.g., DeLay Is Indicted Again in Texas; Money Laundering Is Charge, NY Times.com (October 4, 2005). Because money laundering depends upon a predicate crime, money laundering prosecutions cover a wide spectrum of activity – from drug trafficking to political corruption. The rule of law in this country, however, requires that criminal statutes be interpreted according to their terms and in a manner to provide fair notice. Here, the lower court decision has upheld a money laundering prosecution based upon a statute that Congress has not included as a money laundering predicate offense. Certiorari should be granted to prevent further unwarranted expansion of the money laundering statutes.

II. THE APPLICABLE SENTENCING STATUTE DOES NOT MAKE THE UNITED STATES SENTENCING GUIDELINES PRESUMPTIVELY REASONABLE AND PETITIONER'S SENTENCE WAS UNDULY DISPARATE WHEN COMPARED TO THE SENTENCE IMPOSED ON HIS CO-DEFENDANT

The remedial opinion in United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220 (2005) (Breyer, J.), held that a court of appeals must review a sentence for reasonableness. The Seventh Circuit has said that a properly calculated guidelines sentence is presumed reasonable, subject to rebuttal by a defendant with factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a). United States v. Mykytiuk, 415 F.3d 606, 608 (7th Cir. 2005).[4] Other circuits have employed similar language. See United States v. Jimenez-Beltre, 440 F.3d 514, 518 n.2 (1st Cir. 2006) (en banc) (citing cases).

The circuits, however, have split on the issue of whether a sentence within the guidelines range must be presumed reasonable.[5] In Jimenez-Beltre, the First Circuit held that it is not "helpful to talk about the guidelines as 'presumptively' controlling or a guidelines sentence as 'per se reasonable.'" Id. at 518. The court further observed that "[a]lthough making the guidelines 'presumptive' or 'per se reasonable' does not make them mandatory, it tends in that direction; and anyway terms like 'presumptive' and 'per se' are more ambiguous labels than they at first appear." Id. Citing language from the remedial opinion in Booker, the court held that the guidelines sentencing range should be considered by a district judge, and that the district court's reasons for a sentence should be reviewed for reasonableness. Id.

[4] This presumption originated in Mykytiuk, and has been applied in a series of Seventh Circuit cases. See, e.g., United States v. Owens, 441 F.3d 486, 490 (7th Cir. 2006); United States v. Ellis, 440 F.3d 434, 438 (7th Cir. 2006); United States v. Williams, 436 F.3d 767, 768 (7th Cir. 2006).

[5] Prior to the circuit split identified above, district courts had divided on the role of the guidelines post-Booker. Compare United States v. Wilson, 350 F. Supp.2d 910, 911 (D. Utah 2005) (guidelines should be varied from only "in unusual cases for clearly identified and persuasive reasons"), with United States v. Ranum, 353 F. Supp.2d 984, 985 (E.D. Wis. 2005) (guidelines should be treated as merely one factor in determining a reasonable sentence).

The Seventh Circuit's current thinking is not supported in law. Nothing in the applicable sentencing statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), states that the guidelines are entitled to a presumption of reasonableness. Nothing in § 3553(a) states that the guidelines are to be accorded more weight than the other statutory factors. Furthermore, the Booker remedial opinion did not attach a presumption of reasonableness to a sentence within the guidelines range. Dissenting opinions in Booker also did not suggest that the remedial opinion should be read as attaching a presumption of reasonableness to sentences within the guidelines range. See Booker, 543 U.S. at 300 (Stevens, J., dissenting) ("judges must still consider the sentencing range contained in the Guidelines, but that range is now nothing more than a suggestion that may or may not be persuasive to a judge when weighed against the numerous other considerations listed in 18 U.S.C.A. § 3553(a)"); Booker, 543 U.S. at 305 (Scalia, J., dissenting) ("the sentencing judge, after considering the recited factors (including the Guidelines), has full discretion, as full as what he possessed before the Act was passed, to sentence anywhere within the statutory range").

This Court has not addressed whether the guidelines should be presumed reasonable in Booker's aftermath. This case provides an opportunity to address the issue. The issue is important given the frequency of sentencing-related appeals, and the circuit split identified above.

With respect to the petitioner's disparity argument, the Seventh Circuit addressed it without discussing the entirety of the applicable statutory language. Section 3553(a)(6) provides that a sentence must "avoid unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct." Standards referenced in § 3553(a)(6) include "similar records" and "similar conduct." The Seventh Circuit, however, effectively incorporated an additional standard into the statute, i.e., an exemption of using a cooperating witness' sentence as a basis for a disparity comparison. Because § 3553(a)(6) does not create such an exception, the court should not have employed it to reject the petitioner's disparity argument.

There is, in fact, unwarranted disparity between the sentences of the petitioner and Aulenta. While Aulenta was the principal in the scheme, and committed substantial criminal conduct in addition to the offenses charged in the indictment, he received 16 months less prison time than the petitioner – a 53-year-old, first-time offender, who did not owe a fiduciary duty to ABI/Acordia, or testify at trial. The sentencing disparity between Boscarino and Aulenta is unwarranted and defeats the goal of uniformity in sentencing. See United States v. McGee, 408 F.3d 966, 988 (7th Cir. 2005) ("King maintains that other defendants with similar roles in the conspiracy fared better with their ultimate sentences than he did, undercutting the guidelines' goal of uniformity in sentencing. This is a credible argument . . . ").

III. UNDER THE MANDATORY VICTIMS RESTITUTION ACT, RESTITUTION CANNOT BE ORDERED TO AN ENTITY THAT DID NOT SUSTAIN PECUNIARY LOSS AS A RESULT OF THE OFFENSE

In 1996, Congress enacted the Mandatory Victims Restitution Act ("MVRA"). Pub.L. 103-132, Title II, subtitle A, 110 Stat. 1227 (1996) (codified as 18 U.S.C. § 3663A, 3613A). As the name of the Act implies, the issue of restitution frequently arises in the federal courts in that restitution orders, with few exceptions, are mandatory in criminal cases in which the victim incurred a pecuniary loss.

The MVRA, however, limits the class of potential restitution payees. Specifically, the MVRA provides that the court shall order restitution for specified offenses that result in "an identifiable victim . . . [who] has suffered . . . pecuniary loss." 18 U.S.C. § 3663A(a)(1) and (c)(1)(B) (2003). The MVRA defines the word "victim" as "a person directly and proximately harmed as a result of the commission of an offense for which restitution may be ordered" or "in the case of an offense that involves as an element a scheme, conspiracy, or pattern of criminal activity, any person directly harmed by the defendant's criminal conduct in the course of the scheme, conspiracy, or pattern." 18 U.S.C. §§ 3663(a)(2) and 3663A(a)(2).

Under Illinois law, an insurance brokerage has no right to fees not disclosed to the customer. 215 ILCS 5/507.1. Here, it is undisputed that ABI/Acordia did not disclose overcharges to Rosemont. The overcharges included the referral fees, as well as additional funds ($225,081 between 1992 and 1996). PSR, Deft's Version. The undisclosed fees were charged with the knowledge of ABI/Acordia employees in addition to Aulenta. Tr. 334-35, 344-63, 371-73.

Although Rosemont is the entity that sustained the pecuniary loss as a result of the ABI/Acordia overcharges, the indictment did not name Rosemont as a victim. R. 23. Consequently, the district court did not, and could not, order the payment of restitution to Rosemont. Cf. Hughey v. United States, 495 U.S. 411 (1990). The district court, however, ordered the petitioner to pay restitution to ABI/Acordia. 5/18/05 Tr. 54; R. 258. The Seventh Circuit affirmed the restitution order. Boscarino, 437 F.3d at 637; App. A-5.

The restitution order here is legally erroneous. Stated simply, ABI/Acordia cannot be classified as a "victim" that incurred a "pecuniary loss" as a result of the money laundering offenses. ABI/Acordia had no right to any undisclosed fees in the first place. What ABI/Acordia may have lost was Aulenta's honest services. But that is an intangible right that cannot be recouped through a restitution order.

In its opinion, the Seventh Circuit did not address statutory language that requires a restitution payee to have suffered a "pecuniary loss." Rather, the court cited obscure cases that did not deal with the MVRA. As this Court's decision in Hughey makes clear, however, federal restitution awards must have a statutory basis.

Moreover, it is abundantly clear that ABI/Acordia did not have clean hands in brokering insurance to Rosemont. Yet, by the restitution order here, it will reap a financial windfall. It is unseemly to have federal courts participate in the award of restitution under such circumstances. See United States v. Shepard, 269 F.3d 884, 887 (7th Cir. 2001) (tortfeasor not entitled to restitution); United States v. Martinez, 978 F. Supp. 1442 (D. N.M. 1997) (finding it absurd to order restitution to an illegal casino that was a robbery victim); see also United States v. Randle, 324 F.3d 550, 557 n.4 (7th Cir. 2003) (questioning, without deciding, whether a fraud beneficiary could be awarded restitution).

As a matter of statutory interpretation, the restitution to ABI/Acordia was inappropriate. In light of the frequency in which restitution and loss issues arise in the lower federal courts, the issue presented herein is important and worthy of review.

CONCLUSION

WHEREFORE, Petitioner Nick S. Boscarino respectfully prays that this Honorable Court grant this petition and issue a writ of certiorari to vacate or review the judgment of the Seventh Circuit, remand for further consideration and/or grant any other appropriate relief.

APPENDIX A

437 F.3d 634

United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff-Appellee,
v.
Nick S. BOSCARINO, Defendant-Appellant.

No. 05-2657.

Argued Jan. 19, 2006.
Decided Feb. 8, 2006.

Stephen D. Anderson (argued), Office of the United States Attorney, Chicago, IL, for Plaintiff-Appellee.

Marc W. Martin (argued), Chicago, IL, for Defendant-Appellant.

Before EASTERBROOK, MANION, and KANNE, Circuit Judges.

EASTERBROOK, Circuit Judge.

A jury concluded that an insurance agency overcharged the City of Rosemont for its services and kicked back part of the excess to Nick Boscarino, who helped the agency secure the business. Boscarino also helped Ralph Aulenta, one of the agency's managers, hide money that Aulenta had taken from the till. To top it off, Boscarino failed to report as income much of the ill-gotten gains and committed other tax offenses. Aulenta pleaded guilty and testified against Boscarino, who was convicted of mail fraud, money laundering, and tax crimes. His sentence is 36 months' imprisonment, 24 months' supervised release, a $55,000 fine, restitution of $288,670, special assessments of $1,700, and the costs of prosecution, which the judge set at $4,692 – for Boscarino is the rare criminal defendant who has legitimate assets sufficient to cover all of these monetary exactions.

Boscarino's appellate lawyer has pursued almost every contention that trial counsel raised and lost. The result is that none of the issues has been developed in depth, and strong contentions (if any) have been buried under anemic ones. "Experienced advocates since time beyond memory have emphasized the importance of winnowing out weaker arguments on appeal and focusing on one central issue if possible, or at most on a few key issues." Jones v. Barnes, 463 U.S. 745, 751-52, 103 S.Ct. 3308, 77 L.Ed.2d 987 (1983). We discuss only three of the contentions; the rest have been considered but are too feeble to call for exposition.

Every year that Rosemont placed its insurance through a brokerage that the parties call ABI/Acordia, Aulenta caused the firm to write a check to a corporation that Boscarino controlled. Though the money supposedly was a referral fee to compensate Boscarino for his assistance in persuading Rosemont to give ABI/Acordia the business, the check was never made out to Boscarino. He did not deposit the funds into the corporate accounts; instead he endorsed the checks to Aulenta, who returned half of the amount in monthly dollops over the coming year and kept the rest. The prosecution's theory was that Aulenta was stealing money from ABI/Acordia and sharing half of the takings with Boscarino, in part for his assistance in disguising the transaction; the brokerage did not miss the money because Aulenta simultaneously was overbilling Rosemont, so that ABI/Acordia's books balanced. A jury was entitled to find that Boscarino, who has considerable experience in business, recognized that these transactions had the hallmarks of fraud rather than above-board referral fees. Corporate insiders don't keep half of bona fide referral fees, nor are such fees paid from an insider's personal account after such a roundabout transaction.

Because many of the payments passed through the mails, the indictment included a charge of mail fraud. 18 U.S.C. § 1341. And because Aulenta owed ABI/Acordia a fiduciary duty of loyalty, the indictment alleged that one aspect of the scheme was to defraud ABI/Acordia of Aulenta's honest services. 18 U.S.C. § 1346. This sets up Boscarino's challenge to his conviction for money laundering, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1956. Section 1956 makes it a crime to engage in financial transactions with the proceeds of "specified unlawful activity." That phrase, a defined term, includes "any act or activity constituting an offense listed in section 1961(1) of this title". 18 U.S.C. § 1956(c)(7)(A). Section 1961(1) in turn refers to mail fraud, in violation of § 1341, but does not mention § 1346. Because the mail fraud charge in this case included a reference to § 1346, Boscarino contends, it cannot serve as a predicate offense for money laundering – at least not unless the jury was instructed to disregard the honest-services aspect of the scheme, and his jury was not so instructed.

Whether a mail-fraud scheme that was carried out, in part, by depriving one person of another's honest services may be a predicate offense for a money-laundering conviction is a question of first impression among the courts of appeals. But the answer is not difficult. Section 1346 does not create a separate crime. It is a definitional clause, reading in full: "For the purposes of this chapter, the term 'scheme or artifice to defraud' includes a scheme or artifice to deprive another of the intangible right of honest services."

The scheme to defraud itself violates § 1341, which is a listed predicate offense for the money-laundering statute.

Boscarino observes that only "proceeds" can be laundered, and depriving one's employer of honest services need not yield "proceeds." That's true enough, but when the offense does create proceeds, which are laundered to hide detection, it is sensible to treat them the same as any other proceeds of mail or wire fraud. Consider, for example, the bribery of public officials, as in United States v. Murphy, 768 F.2d 1518 (7th Cir.1985). Judge Murphy took money from litigants in cases over which he presided. Doing this deprived the public of his honest services. He did not take money from the public coffers, but the bribes were "proceeds" of the scheme to defraud, and if he had engaged in financial transactions with these proceeds Judge Murphy could have been convicted of money laundering as well as the scheme to defraud the public. Just so here. Aulenta deprived ABI/Acordia of both his honest services and the firm's money; the cash, which he shared with Boscarino, was "proceeds" that the two could (and did) launder to disguise the money's origin.

Boscarino's jury was instructed that it could convict him of the § 1956 charge only if it found that he engaged in financial transactions with the "proceeds" of a fraud. There is no chance that the jury thought that Boscarino laundered Aulenta's chicanery. One launders money (or clothes) but not "services," honest or otherwise. Anyway, Boscarino did not ask for an instruction that would have made it pellucid that "proceeds" means money and other things of value to third parties, rather than Aulenta's duty of loyalty.

Restitution is the second subject we must cover. The district court ordered Boscarino to repay ABI/Acordia what Aulenta had extracted during the scheme. That's inappropriate, Boscarino contends, because Rosemont rather than ABI/Acordia is the victim; after all, Aulenta obtained that money for the brokerage in the first place by bilking the City. One response is that even a thief can be the victim of a crime. See, e.g., Levin v. United States, 338 F.2d 265 (D.C.Cir.1965). ABI/Acordia was not entitled to this money vis-à-vis Rosemont, but it has rights superior to those of Aulenta and Boscarino. See, e.g., Anderson v. Gouldberg, 51 Minn. 294, 296, 53 N.W. 636, 637 (1892); Ward v. People, 3 Hill 395 (N.Y.1842). Another, and more functional, response is that ABI/Acordia is just a way station for the funds. Once Boscarino reimburses the immediate victim, ABI/Acordia will be able to repay Rosemont. Instead of determining the ultimate incidence of costs created by criminal activity, judges should direct restitution to the immediate victim; other persons' rights in the funds then may be sorted out under normal rules of contract and property law. See United States v. Shepard, 269 F.3d 884, 886-87 (7th Cir.2002).

Finally, we consider Boscarino's contention that his sentence is unreasonably high. Thirty-six months falls within a properly constructed range under the Sentencing Guidelines. (For the loss involved, the range is 33 to 41 months.) Instead of comparing his sentence to the range, however, Boscarino wants us to compare it to Aulenta's sentence. Had Aulenta not pleaded guilty, his range would have been 41-51 months. His guilty plea cut the range to 30-37 months. Because Aulenta assisted the prosecution by testifying against Boscarino, the United States proposed a reduction under U.S.S.G. § 5K1.1, and Aulenta's actual sentence was 20 months. District judges are supposed to reduce disparity in sentencing, see 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(6), and Boscarino contends that it is unacceptably disparate to give the lower sentence to the more culpable offender.

Until recently we refused to address arguments by criminal defendants who sought below-Guideline sentences, at least when district judges recognized their authority to depart. See United States v. Franz, 886 F.2d 973 (7th Cir.1989). United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 125 S.Ct. 738, 160 L.Ed.2d 621 (2005), which abolished "departures" by making the Guidelines advisory, abolished this rule too. See United States v. Vaughn, 433 F.3d 917 (7th Cir.2006); United States v. Arnaout, 431 F.3d 994 (7th Cir.2005). We held in Franz that a request for a below-guideline sentence did not fit any of the categories in 18 U.S.C. § 3742(a), which authorizes appellate review of sentences at defendants' behest. After Booker, however, an "unreasonable" sentence is an unlawful sentence, and § 3742(a)(1) authorizes the correction of any illegal sentence. Because sentences within the Guideline range are presumptively but not conclusively reasonable, we are authorized to entertain contentions that a particular Guideline sentence is unreasonably high.

This is as far as Boscarino gets, however. His argument misunderstands what § 3553(a)(6) means when saying that district judges must consider "the need to avoid unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct". Boscarino and Aulenta had similarly clean records before these convictions, and they engaged in similar conduct, but a sentencing difference is not a forbidden "disparity" if it is justified by legitimate considerations, such as rewards for cooperation. Indeed, before Booker a district judge was forbidden to reduce one defendant's sentence because of a discount properly given to another. See United States v. Meza, 127 F.3d 545 (7th Cir.1997). See also, e.g., United States v. Joyner, 924 F.2d 454 (2d Cir.1991). The norms of sentencing are no longer so unyielding; Booker turns rules into standards, and the rule of Meza is one of those that have been transfigured. See United States v. Newsom, 428 F.3d 685, 688-89 (7th Cir.2005).

Still, Booker is about the allocation of fact-finding authority between judge and jury, and about the burden of persuasion. It does not change rules of law. See, e.g., United States v. Duncan, 413 F.3d 680, 683 (7th Cir.2005); United States v. Rivera, 411 F.3d 864, 866-67 (7th Cir.2005); United States v. Lee, 399 F.3d 864, 866 (7th Cir.2005); McReynolds v. United States, 397 F.3d 479, 481 (7th Cir.2005). A reason bad before Booker (e.g., alienage, race, sex) is bad today. One rule of law that preceded Booker, and retains vitality after it, is that a sentencing difference based on one culprit's assistance to the prosecution is legally appropriate.

There would be considerably less cooperation – and thus more crime – if those who assist prosecutors could not receive lower sentences compared to those who fight to the last. Neither Booker nor § 3553(a)(6) removes the incentive for cooperation – and because this incentive takes the form of a lower sentence for a cooperator than for an otherwise-identical defendant who does not cooperate, the reduction cannot be illegitimate. After all, § 3553(a)(6) disallows "unwarranted sentence disparities" (emphasis added), not all sentence differences.

Another way to put this point is to observe that the kind of "disparity" with which § 3553(a)(6) is concerned is an unjustified difference across judges (or districts) rather than among defendants to a single case. If the national norm for first offenders who gain $275,000 or so by fraud is a sentence in the range of 33 to 41 months, then system-wide sentencing disparity will increase if Boscarino's sentence is reduced so that it comes closer to Aulenta's. Instead of one low sentence, there will be two low sentences. But why should one culprit receive a lower sentence than some otherwise-similar offender, just because the first is "lucky" enough to have a confederate turn state's evidence? Yet that is Boscarino's position, which has neither law nor logic to commend it.

Sentencing disparities are at their ebb when the Guidelines are followed, for the ranges are themselves designed to treat similar offenders similarly. That was the main goal of the Sentencing Reform Act. The more out-of-range sentences that judges impose after Booker, the more disparity there will be. A sentence within a properly ascertained range therefore cannot be treated as unreasonable by reference to § 3553(a)(6).
